

GOVERNOR WHITMAN AT ELLENVILLE FAIR

Large Crowd Welcomes First Governor to Visit an Ulster County Fair—Addresses by the Governor and Commissioners Duffy and Wilson.

Governor's Day at the Ellenville fair on Wednesday was marked by the attendance of a crowd of more than five thousand people from all parts of Ulster and many sections of Orange and Sullivan counties.

Governor Whitman was present and made an address which was listened to with close attention and was received with unstinted applause. It was the first time in the history of the Ulster county fair that the fair has been honored by a visit from the governor of the state, and the people showed their appreciation of Governor Whitman's gracious act.

The governor was accompanied by State Highway Commissioner James Duffy and State Commissioner of Agriculture Wilson, both of whom also made brief addresses.

The important announcement was made by State Highway Commissioner Duffy that plans are under way for the construction of the Lackawack road as a state highway, and that detailed plans for the construction of the Sleighsborough bridge are being made.

Entertained at Yama Farms Inn. The governor's party, a number of county officials and the officials of the Ulster County Agricultural Society were entertained at luncheon at Yama Farms Inn by Frank Seaman.

The members of the luncheon party were Governor Charles S. Whitman, State Highway Commissioner James Duffy, State Commissioner of Agriculture Wilson, Philip Elting, Frank J. Potter, president of the Ulster County Agricultural Society; John McDowell, secretary of the Agricultural Society; Hon. Thomas E. Benedict, ex-Sheriff William S. Doyle, Warden George Deyo of the Napanoch Reformatory, Supervisor W. Kelly Shook, George J. Hoornbeek, Allen D. Potter, H. Westlake Coons, Augustus Denniston, president of the Orange County Agricultural Society; District Attorney William D. Cunningham, Assistant District Attorney Frederick G. Traver, Senator Charles W. Walton, Assemblyman Henry R. DeWitt, Assemblyman Abram P. LeFevre, Jay LeFevre and Mayor Palmer Canfield, Jr.

The guests reached the fair grounds shortly before three o'clock and at once went to the judge's stand opposite the entrance, around which the crowd was waiting. Governor Whitman received an ovation as soon as he reached the judge's stand and bowed his response. He was cheered repeatedly, and three cheers and a tiger were given when he arose to speak.

Cunningham's Felicitous Introduction. District Attorney Cunningham introduced the speakers, and spoke in a happy vein in introducing each of the state officials.

"For the first time in the history of the Ulster County Agricultural Society," said Mr. Cunningham "the governor of the state of New York has thought enough of us to give up a day from the duties which perforce might keep him at his office in Albany and to spend that day with us, in order to learn at first hand our needs and our possibilities, and the result can only be for the betterment of the state, of the county and of this community itself."

"Not only has the governor honored us by his presence but he has brought with him two members of his cabinet; the head of the great agricultural department—and when I say great I fully realize the importance of that expression, because the Empire State is empirical in nothing so much as in agriculture—without whose aid we could not have this exhibit here, and the head of the highway department. While we may look on this exhibit as a local affair, the state of New York takes another and more important view of it, and the great department of agriculture by its hearty and earnest efforts and co-operation makes it possible. The commissioner did not expect to make a speech but he has consented to speak briefly. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you former Professor Wilson of the College of Agriculture of Cornell University, the commissioner of agriculture of the state."

Commissioner Wilson's Remarks. Commissioner Wilson received the first ovation of the day. He said in part:

"I appreciate your cordial welcome. I really feel quite at home in Ulster county because Ulster is one of the leading fruit producing counties of the state and as you know I have been connected with fruit work principally in my college work, and in that way have become well acquainted with what Ulster county has been doing."

"I realize that many of you are not concerned in fruit raising because most of the fruit section of the county lies to the east of Ellenville, but most of us like the apple, which rightly has been termed the king of fruit, and the peach, which has been

is governor and because he is interested in this more or less remote section of the state.

"The state has been fortunate at different times in having as its governors men who were residents of the city of New York, and at other times it has been fortunate in having as governors men who have come from the rural section of the state, but today we have as governor a man who knows the state as no other man knows it. He knows its people, its ideals, its habits of thought and its aims and ambitions of all its people, a man who as so many in later years have done who have gone from rural communities to the city of New York has made for himself a name that is known from Maine to California, from Oregon to Florida.

Governor Whitman needs no introduction to you. The lines of his handsome face are too well known to each and every one of you for anyone to mistake him. It gives me pleasure to announce Governor Whitman.

Gov. Whitman's Speech.

Governor Whitman was loudly applauded as soon as he responded to the introduction, and three cheers and a tiger that were proposed by the introduction, in the crowd were given with him before he was allowed to speak.

Governor Whitman said:

"I am not altogether responsible for my face. (Laughter and applause.) As it is, I've carried it for a great many years. (Applause.) I cannot tell you how glad I am to be here. I am here because I wanted to come. (Laughter.) I am not altogether sure that I have anything to say to you that will be particularly new to you for I know the men and women such as I see before me and you represent pretty well the kind of men and women all over this great state of which we are all so proud, because we are pretty much alike, from Montauk Point to Buffalo. I say I don't think there is much that is new that I can tell you and I haven't really come down here to tell you anything."

"I have come because I wanted to see you, because I like to feel that the New York of which for the time being I am the governor, which I have loved from my childhood as you have, and in which I expect to live and die, is not only the kind of thing that we see on the hill in Albany; that it does not only mean the official life or those who have been or want to be in official life. (Laughter.) There are a great many of us, both, but there is a New York away out beyond Albany, composed of men and women of character and strength and individuality and patriotism and industry and energy that are making this great state as their ancestors have made it—one great dominion of the nation—the Empire State of New York. They represent in every great field of endeavor all that the great nation represents, leading in every great field of endeavor, as the Empire State has led almost from its birth."

"Some years ago when I was a college student, the president of the college sent a request, which was a summons, that I should come to his study. I was not altogether pleased with the request; I had been there before (Laughter), and I could not have been more surprised than I was when on reaching there he informed me that I was to go down to the East Street Church and teach in a men's Bible class. Although I was born and grew up in a Presbyterian parsonage, teaching Sunday school had not been my specialty, and I said 'Mr. President, I cannot do those men any good down there,' but he responded, 'Whitman, I'm perfectly sure you cannot, but I think they will do you good.' (Laughter.)"

"So, ladies and gentlemen, while I am sure that there is nothing I can say that is going to be of any especial interest to this audience, it does me good, and it does every man charged with the solemn responsibilities and sometimes with grave importance and grave responsibility to the people, to get away from it and to see the people whom we believe and love to believe trust us in the past we have trusted them."

"I remember that once in the campaign I stated that I had held public office 15 or 16 years, and I was told that the audience remarked it was time for me to get out and give someone else a chance. (Laughter.) But we have appealed to the people for their trust and confidence a good many times in the past sixteen years and they have never failed to give their support, and we ask you now as citizens, not as a party, (and I am not speaking of party affiliations) to trust the men—I am not speaking of myself—in these great departments—you have seen two of them here today—who are honestly and sincerely as far as it is possible to men, disinterestedly and patriotically, I know, endeavoring to give to this people the kind of administration of its affairs which is not for the benefit of any clique or organization or party at all, but for the benefit of the whole people of the whole state of New York. (Applause.)"

"It can be done; it should be done; and if so we may be able to hold on long enough with the people's support, it will be done in this great state of New York. (Applause.)"

"I wonder how many of you realize that as a state today we are looking forward to the completion of perhaps the greatest and most gigantic engineering feat of the age. The canal of the Panama is on the whole regarded by engineers and those most competent to judge as an easy feat compared with the construction of the Erie canal—a gift of the people of the state of New York in 1820 to the whole nation—I had almost said to the whole world. The Erie canal made the Middle West; the Erie canal made the city of New York. New York was the third city in commerce when the canal was completed; within ten years afterward it was the first. The Erie canal made possible the material advancement and prosperity of the nation, more, perhaps, than any other instrument, and the state of New York gave it to the people. Today $150,000,000 of the state's funds—I am not discussing the merits of it—$150,000,000 of the state's funds are being given by this state to the commerce of the nation. It has cost $350,000,000 to build the Panama—borne by the whole people; $150,000,000—borne by the people of this state—for the commerce of the state and of the nation. We have almost finished, but while its results in the mind of some may be problematical, you and I and all of us have the right to be proud when we realize what New York has done and is doing today."

"And when this community and that community—the great city, if you please, at the foot of the river—complain, we have a right to answer that these moneys expended, coming from all portions of the state—largely from the cities of course—are expended for the benefit of the industries, agricultural as well as others, and of the commerce of the great state, of the great city, and of the great nation."

"We are not a small locality; we are not a combination of a few towns or villages; we are not simply a collection of counties. We in New York are a great commonwealth, a dominion larger (do you realize it?) than the Dominion of Canada. The Governor of New York is concerned with the welfare of more people officially than is the Governor General of the Dominion of Canada. Between eight and nine million people are up there; nearly eleven million are here. It requires infinite patience, it requires a pretty broad view on most of the subjects which regard the people, may honestly and conscientiously differ; it requires constant labor; it requires insistent devotion to public duty and to the work in hand. These are required in the discharge of those duties even passably well, so that the welfare and interest of the property and lives of eleven millions of people may not be disadvantageously affected."

"It is a great problem of this great state of ours. The questions which arise are not easily settled. But after all, the interests of every town and every village and every county are identical and inseparably associated with the interests of the great state. And it is the privilege—and I believe it is the duty of every woman to aid in solving these problems, particularly of those who are in our schools, who are talking every day to the boys and the girls to remind them that the future success and prosperity and welfare and growth and development of this village and of this county depend upon the prosperity of the great state of which it is a vital part."

"I know something of the history of this section of the country. I know something of the history of this county. Although not a native here, in my boyhood, and in yours, I learned to know as you know, what Ulster was, and what was said of it even during the dark days of the Revolution."

"Today it can perhaps be truthfully said and it is almost literally true, that the whole civilized world is living in the shadow of the most awful conflict that the world has ever known. It is well to draw one's mind away from the horrors which this generation is seeing and experiencing—compared to this conflict, no generation has seen anything like it—and for a moment to think of our own present and possible future."

"You and I have no doubt, whatever the future may contain, whatever solemn duties as a nation or as a people we may be called upon to perform, whatever we may be awaiting as a nation, that the people of New York, that the men of New York, are not going back, in the future, on the proud record of the past. And whatever may come, I believe that it will be truthfully said in the years to come as the historian has chronicled in the years that are past, the men of Ulster never knew defeat." (Applause.)

Governor Shakes Hands.

After the governor had concluded, District Attorney Cunningham announced that Governor Whitman was anxious to meet the people of Ulster county personally, and for an hour he was kept busy shaking hands with people who crowded around the stand to be introduced to him.

Late in the afternoon the governor and the commissioners left the fair grounds and proceeded by automobile toward Cortland, where the governor was scheduled to speak today at the Cortland County Fair.

The two leading features of the Ellenville Fair on Wednesday were the horse show and hitching contest. The former was arranged by Kenneth Archer of this city, and there were many entries.

The quarter-mile dash was won by Dick Connor on "Jack the Blood," and the Gladstone race was won by Jansen Hoornbeek. The Affinity race was won by Dick Connor and Miss McDowell.

The prize for the best single driving horse was awarded to Kenneth Archer, and for the best saddle horse to William R. Kraft's "Tago," ridden by Kenneth Archer. Ferd Gildersleeve of this city won second prize. The prize for the best pony in harness was awarded to "Billy Pinto," owned by Miss Margaret Loughran of John street, this city, which was driven by Kenneth Archer. Ferd Gildersleeve did some fancy riding which attracted much attention.

In the hitching contest, Charles Cudney won, with Roy Boyce, second; Preston Cudney, third; Meyer Silverman, fourth.

The ladies' hitching contest was called off for lack of entries.

Big Races Today and Tomorrow.

A great deal of interest was shown by horse owners from all sections of the county in today's races, and a big crowd is expected to attend the races tomorrow, which will be the closing day of the fair.

Tomorrow's races will include the free-for-all, for which there are many entries. The best known horses entered for the free-for-all are Ella Ambukoo, with a mark of 2:04.4, and Shipshawnee King, with a mark of 2:08.4.

All the horses entered for the free-for-all have good records, and some fast speed records are expected to be made.

Injured by a Train.

Richard McWilliams appeared at police headquarters this morning and said he had been injured while trying to jump a freight train at Syracuse and had been put aboard a train for this city. He complained of intense pain in the shoulders where he landed on the rock ballast. McWilliams claims to live in Auburn, Maine. Dr. Stern was called to the city hall to give him treatment.

HUGE WHITE STAR LINER SUNK BY A SUBMARINE

The Arabic, Largest Steamer on Route From Liverpool to New York, Meets the Fate of the Lusitania—Crew Saved, so it is Presumed There was no Loss of Life.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Liverpool, Aug. 19.—The White Star liner Arabic, the largest steamer used in trans-Atlantic traffic after the Lusitania was sunk, has been sunk by a German submarine.

Announcement of the great liner's destruction was made here this afternoon. It was stated that the Arabic's crew had been saved.

When the Arabic was sunk she was on her way from England to the U. S., having sailed from Liverpool yesterday.

The announcement of the Arabic's sinking made no mention of any loss of life and the fact that the crew was saved was taken to indicate that no passengers, if any were aboard, had perished.

It is not known as yet whether there were any Americans aboard the Arabic when the liner was sunk. The gross tonnage of the Arabic was 15,801 tons. Her net tonnage was 14,368 tons.

The liner was built in Belfast in 1903 and since that time has been continuously in the trans-Atlantic service. She was 500 feet long, 55 feet wide and 47 feet deep. She hailed from Liverpool and flew the British flag.

On her latest eastward voyage the Arabic carried a record cargo of war supplies. Among her freight were the following consignments:

Four thousand cases of cartridges, 204 coils of wire rope, 359 cases of aeroplane parts, 106 automobiles, 699 cases of brass rods, 497 cases of fuses, 2,272 jackets for artillery shells, 8,477 steel billets for war purposes, 185 bales of cotton for the manufacture of gun cotton, 1,082 rubber tires for motors in the war zones, 15,815 plates of spelter, 1,564 copper cathodes, 80 barrels of nickel blanks, 141 cases of brass blanks, 1,514 bags of nails and 337 barrels of lubricating oil.

An attempt was made to sink the Arabic last month. On August 7, the day after the Arabic arrived at Liverpool, it became known that two sticks of dynamite had been found upon the liner on July 27, the day before she sailed from New York. The dynamite was found by a private detective employed by the White Star line. Part of his duties was to search the ship and the explosive was found in a settee in the women's retiring room.

Ever since the war began the Arabic has been active in carrying war supplies. In addition to her freight she usually carried a large passenger list. The crew, being warned that the vessel might meet the same fate as the Lusitania, formed a rifle club and practised daily with long range rifles of heavy calibre. The seamen would trail a small raft about 100 yards astern of the vessel upon which a stick of wood was stuck to represent a submarine periscope. This served as a target.

Last March, not long after Germany formally opened her submarine war, the Arabic reported sighting a German submarine off Cherbourg, had no difficulty in getting out of the path of danger.

Washington, Aug. 19.—State department officials received the first news of the sinking of the Arabic by a German submarine from the U. S. S. and Germany. The officials were anxious to learn if any Americans were aboard.

He is of American birth, his father having served in the Civil War. Father Strack has a leave of absence for a year and probably will soon return to Germany where his family is one of prominence. Just Scratched Her Arm.

The case of The People against Silas Witcher came up in recorder's court this morning when the defendant was arraigned on the charge of assault in the second degree. It was claimed that he had cut Laura Smith in a row on Ann street on Monday night. It was learned when the complaining witness appeared this morning that she had been merely scratched on the arm by a penknife and that she was unwilling to press the charge. Recorder Lang consented to having the charge reduced to assault in the third degree in view of the facts. The defendant pleaded guilty and paid a fine of $5 after which he was discharged.

Johnston Coal Company.

KINGSTON SHRINERS TO HOLD CLAMBAKE

The Shriners on that day will be accompanied to Poughkeepsie by a band and will wear their red fezes and have their usual good time. The shriners will charter a boat which will carry them to Poughkeepsie together with their wives and sweethearts.

The executive committee in charge of this affair are: Ward B. Everett, president; Aaron Cohen, vice-president; Matthew Herzog, secretary; William F. Brodick, treasurer; William Van Ettes, A. E. Dederick and William Johnston. Other members who went yesterday were Frank Byer, Charles B. Everett, Samuel Brown and Dr. Johnston.

Back to Walkill.

A Walkill visitor was John Smith, who was arrested by Police-Constable Connelly for being drunk and unable to take care of himself on Broadway. He is about 60 years old and spent most of Wednesday afternoon in the lockup singing to himself until he fell to sleep. When brought to the bar of justice this morning he said he came here to visit and went into two saloons to telephone, having a drink of rye in each place. That is all he remembered until he awoke in a cell. Recorder Lang advised the old man to go back home to Walkill and stay sober in the future.

Pays a $5 Fine.

Paul Nichols of Walkill was arrested on Broadway on Wednesday night by Policeman O'Neil on the charge of violating the traffic ordinance. The officer said that Nichols had driven his car past a halted roller car while passengers were alighting. Defendant pleaded innocence of the local ordinance but was fined $5 which he paid.

GOOD PITCHING STAFF QUITE ESSENTIAL

(By FRANK G. MENKE.)

What does it avail a ball club if it possesses the greatest batsmen in the land if its pitching staff is puny? And the answer is: Nothing.

A good pitching staff is far more essential to a ball club's success than is a wrecking crew of batters. Baseball records of the past and present show the truth of that statement.

Those New York Giants are in a rut although they have three men slugging over the 300 mark and three others near it. Doyle is hitting around .325, Merkle is slugging for .320 and Robertson boasts of a .310 average.

No team in baseball packs a greater batting punch than those Brooklyn Dodgers. Magree is hitting around .375 and Kauff is near .360. Three other Brooklyn regulars are over the .300 mark—yet the team is in the second division.

The Detroit outfield is swatting the well-known horse's skin for a combined average around .360—a tremendous clip, yet the Tigers are third in the race.

Back in the bygone days the Cleveland Naps toted around the greatest collection of sluggers that ever battled under one standard—Lajcie, Bemis, Bay, Hickman, Bradley, "Nig" Clarke and a few more fence busters. Practically every man in the outfield was a .300 hitter. Yet Cleveland during those days never came near to winning a pennant.

On the other hand, the Chicago

White Sox, back in 1906, had pitchers—and no batters. Yet the Sox won a pennant and a world series in that year. In 1912, 1913 and 1914 the Senators, minus batting power but plus some mighty pitchers, acted as runners-up in nearly all three pennant battles.

Getting right down to this present day and age we find the Phillies clinging to the top of the National league heap. Outside of Luderus and Cravath, the Phillies haven't any batters—but they have Grover Cleveland Alexander and a few other pitching persons. The Dodgers, who have assumed the role of runner-up, have a real batter in Jake Daubert and a timely hitter in Zack Wheat. Their hitting power ends there. But the Dodgers have Weiser, Dell, Jack Combs, "Hase" Pfoffer and "Nap" Rucker on the pitching staff. That's why they are where they are.

The Red Sox, as a team, aren't hitting up to pennant-winning standard. But they have about five pitchers who are pitching a world series brand of baseball—and look where those Red Sox are located in the standing of clubs.

The Kansas City Feds and the St. Louis Feds present weak-hitting combinations. But they have the pitchers—and they've been in the pennant fight since the middle of May.

In other words, one good pitcher seems to be of more value to a ball club than two or three slugging infielders, outfielders or catchers.

FEDS SELECT WRONG PLAYER

Larry Gardner of Red Sox. One of Least Likely to Jump to Outlaw League—Loyal to Boston.

A story was printed recently to the effect that the St. Louis Federals expected to sign Larry Gardner of the Boston Red Sox.

The story evidently was printed in hopes of stirring interest in the Slouderer upon their return home, for Manager Fielder Jones afterwards said it was "the result of a joke."

Gardner was with the Red Sox in Detroit at the time and he denounced the story as a base fabrication.

A Boston writer commenting on the story says: "From our knowledge of the way Larry Vermont Gardner of the Red Sox looks at such things as promises, even if that promise happens to be a contract to de-

THE GREEN MANIKIN

A Story With "Heart Interest"

By AGNES G. BROGAN

When David Bronson heard an American speaking voice in that little far-away Parisian restaurant an emotion that was surprising surged within him. "So this was what had been the trouble of late, this the cause of his unfinished book—homesickness, pure old-fashioned homesickness."

Long ago, as a lad, he had realized this desperate feeling. Now the sound of that familiar tongue brought back a longing to be "among his own" which was almost unbearable, back again in "little old New York," for from her accent the speaker had also lived in that vicinity. Bronson whistled about to look at her. Demure and unaware of admiring glances, she sat at a nearby table, "conspicuously simple" in her close fitting black suit and turban.

Bronson struggled against an uncontrollable desire to hear again that soft voicing of his mother tongue, then with a muttered, "May I?" sank into a seat at the opposite side of the table. The restaurant being unduly crowded, his intrusion was calmly taken for granted. Happily absorbed, he gazed at the lovely, downcast face of his companion, and she, glancing up at last, smiled. A frank, engaging smile it was, like that of a friendly child.

"The salt?" Bronson asked politely, while the girl's smile deepened. "So you, too, are American," she said. All the pent-up longings of the man's home yearning soul broke forth at her question.

"American—yes," he answered, "and if you could but know the joy it gives me merely to be again in the presence of an American! I might have sought out my countrymen here, I suppose, but—he laughed shortly—"I did not recognize my need until I heard your voice."

The girl leaned impulsively forward. "I know," she breathed. "Oh, I know! For weeks I've been fighting off the desire to go back. Sometimes it was almost too strong for me. I've got to stay here, you see. I must, until—" "Until," he prompted gently. The girl drew back, continuing her meal. "Until I make good," she answered quietly.

"Student?" the man questioned. She nodded her head. "There are so many of us," she said ruefully. "I would be artists, musicians—mostly failures."

The girl's low laughter ended in a wry smile. "I'm an art failure," she replied, with a shrug of the shoulders. Bronson's quick glance was sympathetic.

"Perhaps not," he encouraged. "Better stick it out a little longer and see." She arose, drawing on her gloves, and stood looking now on the gloves, now on him.

"I intend to," she answered brightly. With visible regret the author also arose. "Pardon the boldness of a fellow American," he entreated, "but may I not hope to see you again?"

"Why not?" the girl carelessly responded. "I dine here every day." So it happened that the small table beneath the window came quite naturally to be a place of meeting, a place for the exchange of simple confidences, for comforting recollections of home beloved scenes and home happy times. To the man this one hour was a sort of panacea for all the trials of a troubled day. About it his dreams centered as a reward for nightly hours of writing. And the girl's open pleasure in these meetings was a constant growing joy.

"Do you know," she asked in her ingenuous way, "I cannot get over the idea that I have known your face before? It was strangely familiar from the first, and yet—"

Then David Bronson knew that his hour of announcement had come. It had been a gratifying thing to hide for a time from the paths of fame and to feel that his unknown personality had powers of its own to awaken interest and pleasure. With a sigh he drew forth his card and placed it before her.

"David B. Bronson," the girl read aloud, while recollection widened in her eyes. "Not," she said in a tone of awe—"not David Bronson, the author?" He nodded abruptly.

"And you are writing a book over here," she went on slowly, "a book with a French setting perhaps and one of your wonderful American heroines?" "The heroine," he confessed, "proves a disappointment. She is so exactly what she seems to be—commonplace, no human heart interest."

The girl turned wearily aside. His admission of greatness seemed all at once to put him far from her presumption of friendship. "Look about you," she said. "You'll find human heart stories among us all."

Bronson got hastily into his coat. "Just this once," he begged, "allow me to walk with you." Heretofore this request had been refused. Now the girl deliberated. "You may come," she agreed. "Down the sunlit narrow street they went, crowds jostling her slim figure against the shelter of his arm—on through poorer districts and poorer streets where the limit of dingy shabbiness seemed to have been reached the girl paused.

the struggling art student, the beloved little student, had never been. Across his very memory of her must ever flash that crimson painted smile. He frowned disapproval when next day the girl herself slipped quietly into her accustomed seat.

"May I tell you," she asked, "the story of a green model who, unlike your difficult heroine, is not exactly as she seems, not exactly commonplace? Her story may even have heart interest."

Wondering, he silently bowed his head. The girl laughed tremulously. "Fame is an illusive thing," she quoted. "One may more quickly find her because of one's ability to wear a certain color than for the reward of tireless years of study. Over in America my old father and my mother and the sister who has always been sick wait for a success in art which was prophesied surely for me. To this purpose the savings of years. This had also been my father's youthful dream—to go abroad and perfect his own sketches, to achieve fame which critics promised. Marriage and later cares had forced this dream aside, but now it was to be fulfilled, gloriously fulfilled, in myself, the daughter."

"But that which had seemed an assured inheritance at home became here a doubtful promise, and at length the savings were gone—all gone! Do you see, then?" she cried passionately, "what I have been doing? Deceiving them all along; writing, as I fancied, the glow on their faces, of how one sketch had been accepted, of how another brought the check enclosed, and all the time all the time I was but a dressmaker's model, a manikin in green. How else could one make money here alone in a foreign land? But now—her voice broke despairingly—"how dare I go back, I with my nocking boast of art?"

Something gripped hard at the man's throat, and his hand reached out to clasp the girl's.

"Tomorrow," he said slowly, "tomorrow I want to see those sketches."

Tomorrow he saw them. As he turned them over, looking intently at each, an expression of admiration gathered on his face. When he came to the last he looked up at her and said:

"It's the old story—genius stooping to feed on crumbs from the rich man's table while it secured recognition."

And to two old people seated before their farmhouse door there came one eye a letter. "Read it," said the mother. "It's from our girl beyond the sea."

The old man glanced quickly back from the closely written page. "Why," he cried, "why, she's to illustrate that great author's new book, mother, our own little girl!"

In speechless joy they gazed into each other's face. Then together they finished the letter.

"Books and pictures must ever wait for love," wrote the girl, "so David Bronson and I are coming home together. Your daughter has married the author."

Putting Off. When the ship Central America sprung leak in midocean a steamer, seeing her signal, drew near and asked, "What is amiss?" "We are in bad repair. Lie by till morning," was the answer. "Better let me take your passengers on board now." "No," said the captain; "lie by till morning." In an hour the lights of the ill fated steamer were not visible. She had gone down, and all had perished.

Mr. Moody once closed a meeting in Chicago, saying, "Think this matter over till next Sunday." On their way home from church that evening a light suddenly flashed across the sky. It was the beginning of the great Chicago fire. That congregation never assembled again.—Christian Herald.

Hurrying Up. Melancholy Aunt Clara from the country had the habit of listening to the big clock on the town hall in the village where she was visiting and exclaiming every time it struck: "Eternity draws one hour nearer."

Clarence was very much impressed with that solemn reflection. One day the big clock got out of order. While repairing it the workmen made it strike every few minutes. Clarence heard it with bulging eyes.

"Oh, Aunt Clara," he said excitedly, "eternity has got a move on today!"—New York Times.

LURING WILD GEESSE.

Live Decoys Are Often Used and Made to Play the Traitor.

American wild geese each spring migrate from waters of the southern states to the shores of the Arctic in northern Canada. The two great common varieties of the bird are the honkers and the wavy, or white, geese.

Both of these are extensively hunted. Covering, as they do, about 5,000 miles on their annual migration, these birds rest at various places en route and are thus shot by sportsmen almost across the length of the continent. The birds have a peculiar trait of always leaving one of their number on look-out while the rest feed.

To aid in the shooting of wild geese live wild ones, captured young and raised in captivity, are often placed in feeding grounds in likely territory on the line of flight of the migrating flocks. These decoys are terrible traitors and by their calling often bring the flying ones within shooting distance of the sportsmen, who lie in hidden pits near at hand.

Painted decoys, shaped like geese and made of steel, are also used by the hunters. In the latter case the men, from their hiding place in the pits, call the birds by using a goose call, a metal instrument like a flute, which mimics the sound of the goose with remarkable realism.—Philadelphia North American.

Writing on Metals. By the Use of Wax and Acids Etchings May Easily Be Made.

Usually a man attempts to put his name on his metal possessions by scratching with a file or knife point and makes the poorest sort of a job. It is really very easy to write on any metal—the blade of a jackknife, a watchcase, skates—if one happens to know how, and the attractiveness of the inscription is limited only by the artistic ability of the individual.

Cover the place where you wish to write with a thin coating of melted beeswax. When the wax is cold write plainly with any pointed instrument, being particular to cut the letters through the wax to the metal.

Then mix one ounce of muriatic acid and one-half of an ounce of nitric acid, or smaller quantities in the same proportions (and remember that those acids are deadly poisons, and apply the mixture to the lettering with a feather, carefully filling each letter).

Allow the acids to remain from one to ten minutes, according as the etching is to be light or deep. Next dip the article in water, wash out the acids and melt off the wax, and the thing is done. A little oil should be applied as a finishing touch. Gold, silver, iron or steel can be marked in this way.—Youth's Companion.

Berthollet and Robespierre. It is said that the celebrated savant Berthollet in the most dangerous times of the republic sustained his fearless love of truth. Some days prior to the ninth Thermidor a sandy deposit was found in a barrel of brandy intended for the army. The contractors, suspected of poisoning, were immediately arrested, and the scaffold was already prepared. Berthollet, however, examined the brandy and reported it free from all adulteration.

"You dare maintain," said Robespierre to him, "that that brandy does not contain poison?"

As his reply Berthollet drank off a glass, saying, "I never drank so much before."

"You have plenty of courage!" exclaimed Robespierre.

"I had more when I signed my report," replied the chemist, and here the matter terminated.

Seventh Century Needlework. Before the end of the seventh century needlework was carried to great perfection in convents, where it was used for the establishment of the church and the decoration of priestly robes. Artists did not think it beneath their dignity to trace the patterns used for embroidery in their natural colors. A certain religious lady, wishing to embroider a sacerdotal vestment, asked no less a personage than St. Dunstan, then a young man, but already noted for his artistic skill and taste, to draw the flowers and figures, which

Ben Franklin's Chair. In his old age Benjamin Franklin health failed him to a considerable extent. He suffered from gout and rheumatism, which, with complication eventually carried him off. But he always exceedingly cheerful, even when suffering, and, as one of his friends has recorded, "full of anecd and learning." Even at this time his life he added to the already extensive list of his inventions, contriv among other things a most curious chair which, when desired, could converted into a stepladder for purpose of reaching the higher shelves in a library. As far as known, one of these chairs was ever actual constructed for his own particular use and this is owned at present by the Philosophical society of Philadelphia.

Rain. There are so many things worse than rain that we refuse to fret about it. If we had the toothache every other day for two months straight we might growl. If an amateur cornetist next door and practiced regularly, we should complain; if bills were sent in once a week instead of once a month; if bones never went home; if all friendship were mercenary and false in adversity; if sickness visited us oftener and stayed longer than health; if malicious people were many and the kind few we might justifiably be miserable and remain so.

But so long as so many worse things that could be done to it can rain every day if it wants to. Most of our joy is weather proof.—Detroit Free Press.

Copernicus. Nicholas Copernicus was the founder of modern astronomy. He was born in Poland in 1473. His father was a Pole, and his mother was a German. He went to the university at Cracow, where he studied medicine, theology, mathematics and astronomy. Later he devoted his whole attention to astronomy and developed the "Copernican" system, which is the one now universally accepted. It regards the sun as the center of the solar system and the planets, of which the earth is one, as revolving around it, why around the majority of these planets one or more secondary orbits, known as moons, revolve. The first stars as regarded as suns, each with its own planetary system.

The Vatican. The Vatican was not originally intended as a place of residence. Originally a small part of it is no residential; the remainder serves the purposes of science, art and the administration of the Catholic church. # GALVESTON'S LOSS IS $15,000,000

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Galveston, Tex., Aug. 19.—(Via Beaumont, Tex.)—Galveston has survived the most severe storm in her history with a known loss of 39 lives and a property loss of about $15,000,000. This loss, however, is negligible when compared with the terrible hurricane that blew out of the West Indies and touched with death any towns and cities along the Gulf coast from Sabine Pass to Matagorda Bay.

In Galveston the storm roared in frightful menace through the city for more than 24 hours, and to the strength of the great sea wall alone Galveston owes its salvation. Had it not been for this immense bulwark, thousands of lives would have been lost.

Not a business house nor residence in the city escaped damage in some degree and the property loss is enormous.

The principal destruction of property occurred near the wharves. The cotton piers all suffered, one or two being washed away.

Two elevators were seriously damaged by the wind.

Five ocean-going steamers are aground on Pelican Island and the United States army transport McClellan is stuck there also. Small craft were destroyed by the score.

The principal damage to residence property was on the water-front and beach.

The dead include four soldiers, one civilian and a young boy, all unidentified except Ernest Rohel.

So far there are no reported cases of destitution and a mass meeting of citizens called together by Mayor Lewis Fisher took steps to take care of such cases as develop. At the mass meeting a committee of forty-five citizens was appointed to supervise the city's safety and it was decided to place the city under martial law, as looting had been reported in scattered localities.

Requests have been sent for companies of regular infantry to patrol the city and they are expected to arrive by boat today.

The local naval militia company and a number of private citizens have been created special policemen to protect property.

All saloons have been closed by order of Mayor Fisher.

The looting was done in most cases by negroes who were discovered at work when daylight broke Wednesday. Prompt steps were taken to prevent further depredation.

Although the sea wall stood the test of the terrific storm and the great Galveston boulevard through a great part of its extent is washed up and was today only a series of brick piles. It is littered in all directions with debris and it will take months to restore conditions to normal.

Although all public buildings and most of the downtown stores were crowded, as soon as the storm moderated they began returning to their homes.

There were fully one thousand people quartered in the court house and an equal number was found in many other buildings.

The most pathetic sight perhaps, was presented at the city hall and police station. Here were gathered hundreds of refugees who had been picked up by the police and fire departments patrols which worked without rest bringing in men, women and children who were in danger on the streets or in the shanties in which they had lived. In the number were perhaps a dozen women with babes in arms, and the walls of these little creatures and the efforts of frightened mothers to soothe them were heartrending.

There were some cots, but the few who slept made their beds on the bare floor. Early Tuesday police officers found two wandering cows, which they drove through the blinding rain and the waist deep water into the city hall. The cows were taken into the hall and there a mother with four tiny tots filled a tin pail from their bags, thus obtaining a milk supply for her own brood and for the other babies. It was the first meal many of them had had in 12 or more hours.

The wind began blowing Monday, as the International News Service was advised, and soon citizens began leaving the city for the mainland. The fitful gusts of wind which preceded the steady blow of the storm was a warning to those who knew the characteristics of the West Indian hurricane. The barometer dropped rapidly. The weather bureau had sent out ample warning and this precaution in great measure saved many lives.

The exodus was too great for the capacity of trains and the interurbans, and those who could not get away settled down to "face the music." Practically all the people living near the water front or beach came up town for safety early Monday afternoon.

The gale steadily increased to a velocity of 70 miles at 4 o'clock Tuesday. Street car service had been suspended for considerable time. Lights and power were gone and wires and signs began to crash to the streets from every direction.

At that time the wind was north-northeast and it was hoped the center of the hurricane would pass Galveston to the east.

A tropical downpour had augmented the force of the wind from 11 o'clock and shortly after noon the streets began to fill with water.

By 4 o'clock the waters of Galveston Bay were being backed up by the north wind and soon the streets were covered to a depth of two feet and water began to run into all stores and basements. The rise continued until midnight when throughout the business district the depth ranged from shoulder deep to over a man's head.

This put all the telegraph companies out of commission but I remained at the telegraph office until after 9 o'clock Monday night writing messages which I knew could not be delivered. In the Western Union office I sat until the water was waist deep in me until that a wire would be opened. I saw water almost all the way to where I had my family, 15 blocks away.

Terror over the ominous situation was further increased shortly after 10 o'clock that night by the simultaneous appearance of two fires which cast a glow over the whole city. The O. K. Laundry and a large cotton warehouse on the water front were burned to the ground. Many feared that the city would be destroyed by fire.

A fortunate veer in the wind which turned to the southeast, was received with shouts of approval by refugees in the building and there were many joyous shouts of "She's letting up; she's letting up." But this joy was short lived.

The Storm King had been bracing himself for another blow from a different direction. Soon the fierce roar of the storm was heard and in a short time the velocity of the wind was 30 miles an hour. This wind came directly off the Gulf and water was dashed over the sea wall in torrents. The force of the waves tore down the bath houses along the beaches and destroyed long sections of the splendid boulevard. It added also the great swamps of water in all the streets.

The gale continued for hours and while the velocity never reached the proportions of the 1901 storm, it was of greater duration than any other and had the added danger of blowing from the northeast for hours and then repeating worse than ever from the southeast.

As I write the wind has subsided and practically all the water has run off into the bay. The tug Pilot Boy and the launch R. Waverly with 15 men have not been accounted for and are given up by their owners lost. Dredges, including the Miller Davis, the San Jacinto, the Sam Houston, the Suderman and the Dolson and Nanson, it is feared, are also lost with their crews.

One schooner blew all the way into Galveston from Mobile, loaded with hemp and was deposited on top of the sea wall near Port Crockett. Two of her sailors suffered broken limbs, but no lives were lost. The steamship Ribston aground here is feared to be severely damaged.

The scene at the Galveston docks is one of wreckage and great disorder. Hundreds of sail boats and launches are piled up in indiscriminate heaps and few are better than total losses.

In spite of the fury of the storm the crews stayed with some of these smaller boats and only one man lost his life in this manner, an unidentified seaman having been drowned at the Gulf Fisheries pier. The National Biscuit Company has offered its entire stock free to the public and the news quickly spread. This caused a crush of several hundred men and boys, all of them carrying off huge packages of crackers and canisters of cakes. Boys did a good business out of this beneficence by taking several loads of cakes and crackers and selling them on the streets.

All down town groceries were opened the next day after the storm and the rush for food almost swamped them.

A good business in groceries was done by negroes and boys who found rowboats and filled them with foodstuffs which they hawked through the streets of the city.

The citizens' committee and Mayor Fisher have announced that the city commission has made arrangements which will guarantee an adequate water supply for domestic purposes. The break in the main is already being repaired and linemen are at work repairing wires. In spite of the terrific damage to the water-front it is expected that elevators and cotton sheds will be ready for business within a few weeks and that commerce will be resumed without loss of time.

Plate-glass and windows were smashed out generally over town and much damage was done by rain as well as by the water from the bay. The latter was deep enough to ruin a big proportion of ground floor stocks, while the rain literally flooded thousands of dollars' worth of goods exposed by the winds. Residences and private buildings and furniture have been damaged in large amounts. Most of this loss was due to water driven in by wind. Nearly every house on the beach front is down. This includes pleasure resorts and restaurant and hotel buildings. The Hotel Galveston, however, and several other strong buildings facing the water escaped with practically no damage.

The general attitude despite the calamity was one of cheerfulness. At the mass meeting at which plans to clean up the city were made Mayor Fisher broke down and cried with grief, but regained composure. He declared that Galveston would be a greater port and a better city than ever. There is talk of a grade raising on the channel front protecting the city from repetition of the inundation from Galveston Bay. Many thrilling rescues were made during the storm especially by firemen and police. When the laundry burned the Masonic Temple was threatened and in the full intensity of the storm, women and children were removed from this building to the Scottish Rite cathedral. One policeman carried 12 women out of the threatened building.

YOUNG GARDENERS WHO DID WELL

Through an error of the committee having in charge the awarding of prizes to school children for garden work, the name of one little boy was omitted. He was Stanley Crispell, of No. 89 O'Neil street, and he won the prize for the best vegetable garden for boys under ten years of age. He comes from School No. 6.

It was the plan of the committee to award a prize to the child in each district having the best flower garden, over ten years and under ten years and the best vegetable garden over ten years and under ten years, but in some districts they have been unable to award all these prizes as the work did not warrant their doing so, whereas in other districts two children did equally good work and both deserve prizes. ### Better Paint

Better paint this year if your property needs it. Mistaken men have been waiting for paint to come down. The cost of their job has gone up not down; it always goes up by waiting; never comes down.

Better paint than Devco? There isn't any.

Suppose one had waited 20 or 30 years ago for a better paint than Devco, how long would he have waited? How long would he still have to wait?

The price a gallon makes some difference; yes, but not much; it's the paint that counts; the quality counts.

It's the go-for that counts. Protection of property counts more yet. Better paint.

CITY NOW OWNS
FORSYTH PARK

The deed by which Forsyth Park is conveyed to the city was executed this morning by Miss Katherine B. Forsyth, Miss Petronella B. Forsyth and Mrs. Mary L. Forsyth, and was delivered to Mayor Canfield.

The tract forming Forsyth Park contains 18½ acres and has a frontage of over 800 feet on Lucas avenue. It includes the two picturesque ledges of rocks, the wooded knoll, the large tract of meadow along Lucas avenue and the adjoining apple orchard, which was not included in the tract when the offer of the property to the city as a gift was first made by the members of the Forsyth family.

The acknowledgment to the deed was taken before DeWitt Roosa as notary public and the deed was delivered to Mayor Canfield by Miss Katherine B. Forsyth in the presence of others. Mayor Canfield accepted the deed on behalf of the city and extended to the donors the city's sincere thanks for their magnificent gift.

Steps will be taken at once to do whatever is necessary to make the park ready for the use and enjoyment of the public. Benches will be placed in various portions of the tract and swings will be erected for the children. The natural beauty of the place cannot be improved upon and only some slight grading will be needed later.

After the first of January the park will be under the control and supervision of the Board of Public Works which was created by the amendment to the city charter passed by the last legislature.

The Pink
Greek's Jest

How a Man Got Richly Paid
For Telling the Truth.

By WILLETT STOCKARD
Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

To his friends Newsome was known as the disinherited kid. He had been discovered by his father five different times, and upon the last occasion his father had sworn that he was through with him for all time.

But when the boy was arrested for the murder of one Mick Wamley and it began to look as if the case against him was a matter of life and death Mr. Newsome relented and did all in his power to save his son.

An acquaintance of Wamley's had gone to his room early one morning and had found Newsome there in a drunken sleep.

When the latter was awakened he arose, still a little unsteady on his feet, and went away, informing the other that he did not know of Wamley's whereabouts. A short time afterward Wamley's body was found under the bed with half a dozen wounds in the heart. A dirk was lying by his side.

A few hours later Newsome was arrested in his own room.

He denied at first that he had been at Wamley's for several days, but when told that three or four people had seen him when he left that morning he was forced to admit that he had spent the night there. He still insisted, however, that Wamley had not been there and that he had not seen him the night before at all.

Newsome persisted in denying the truth of the testimony of the others until he saw that his stand was utterly useless. Then he admitted having killed Wamley, but stated that it was in self defense.

He told numerous stories of the affair, in all of which he was trapped in some contradictory statements. Finally he confessed that he was dead drunk all of the day before and had no recollection of being with Wamley or of seeing him.

The defense had deplorably little evidence they could offer at the trial. The state, on the other hand, had more than it was considered necessary to use, more than enough for the jury to bring in a verdict of guilty after the first ballot. The prisoner was sentenced to death.

His lawyers continued to do their utmost. There was another trial.

And then when every recourse was exhausted, when even a father's frantic mind could think of nothing else to be done, when the last hope had succumbed, Mr. Newsome received a strange caller, a ferret faced man who gave the impression that he was a resident of the under part of the city.

"Will you give me $5,000 if I can save your son?" he asked without preliminaries of any kind.

Mr. Newsome looked at him, surprised, but eagerly grasping at the least wisp of encouragement.

"Have you found out something about the case—some new evidence that will help?"

"Not a line, not a word," he answered, and then, after a pause of an instant, he added, "but I will."

"What do you mean? How will you?"

"Just you let me attend to all of that," said the visitor with a suave smile. "All you need do is to get the five thousand ready when I'm ready for it."

Leaving Mr. Newsome in the midst of a rush of questions, of entreaties and thanks, the other left and took a roundabout course toward the lower part of the city.

He entered a tenement in Elizabeth street, and went up to a flat upon the topmost floor, where his rap was answered by the appearance of a swarthy, sad faced woman.

"I want to see your man Joe," he told her.

"He's very sick," she replied, but humbly led him into one of the inner rooms.

A man was lying on a bed beside the window opening upon a narrow inner court. The room was dark in spite of the fact that it was next to the roof. His face was haggard and covered with heavy beard, above the upper part of which showed a mark of red.

When the man was shaven one side of his face displayed a large patch of a light reddish color, a birthmark that had given him the name of the Pink Greek.

He looked up at his caller with slight interest.

"I'm mighty sorry to hear about it, Joe," the latter began, "but the croakers just told me that you'd pass in a day or two."

"Three days," the Greek interrupted snarlingly. "That's my business, ain't it?"

"I don't know. Probably it might concern your wife and your little kids."

"Then that's theirs. What's it to you?"

"Well, most everybody's alike in some ways, 'guns' and everybody else. When a man's wife has stuck by him, and he's got a lot of helpless little kids he's leaving behind, he usually can't help hating to go, especially when he knows they haven't got anything, and are going to get thrown out of the house in not more than a month or so."

The Greek made an effort to arise as he cursed the lawyer, failed at him for trying to torture a man who could not defend himself, threatened him and ordered him from the house.

"Now, now, Joe," went on the lawyer in a soothing voice, "don't fly all to pieces like that, because I'm your friend and I'm going to help you. I've worked out a scheme for us to get a thousand between us. I intended to split it fifty-fifty when I came down here, but I've got a heart, and—well, after I saw your wife and kids I decided to turn over nine hundred for them. The most of what's left will have to go for expenses I'll be put to in the case."

He hesitated and cast a significant look at the woman seated near the bed, but the sick man reassured him.

"She's all right," he said. "You don't have to be afraid to let her hear anything you got to say. Go on with it."

"Well, then," went on the lawyer, "what I want to say is this—you know Mick Wamley, the gink they're planning to send that Newsome kid to the chair for croaking—you know him and Newsome both, didn't you?"

The other nodded.

"I knew you did, and that's the reason why I came to you—that, and the fact that you'll soon be out of reach of the law, as you might put it. If you'll agree to what I'm asking of you, I'll promise that your statements won't be turned over to the authorities till after you're gone. What I want you to do is to say that you were the one that killed Wamley."

"Now," said the Greek's wife quickly, speaking with a foreign accent. "He didn't kill him. I don't want that he should say he did. The bambinos—they're to be Americans. I don't want their father."

"Now, just listen to me," interrupted the lawyer. "It won't hurt Joe's conscience to say what I'm asking him to do and it won't hurt his reputation. Everybody knows he bumped off that gink in Oliver street, and even the cops and the judge that turned him loose knew that he got the Italian on Centre street just after the gink snatched on him, although they didn't have evidence enough to hold him for it."

"Spring it, spring it," the dying man ordered. "You think I got all the time in the world to listen to you? Go on with the rest of it."

"I've got all the particulars of this Newsome case—everything that came up at the trial and a lot that didn't—so I can plot Wamley's movements every hour of the day and night before he was killed. I can dope out some story of a quarrel between you and him, and if you'll follow out what I tell you there won't be any chance for anybody to pick any flaws in the tale. He was killed the night of March the 16th. See if there isn't some way that you can remember where you were that night."

"He was at home that night," the woman said. "He was sick. He had been in bed for two weeks."

"That was when this con was just beginning to get me down for the last time," the Greek explained. "She's right, because I remember when Wamley was killed. I hadn't been out of the flat for two weeks before then."

The lawyer pondered for awhile.

"People with your kind of sickness get a lot better every once in awhile for a little time, don't they?" he asked.

"I've been able to be up several times since then," the other answered. "I've been able to walk around a little."

"Good!" the lawyer interposed. "Well say that you got to feeling better that evening and got up and went out about town for awhile. Is there anybody that would know whether it was so or not?"

"Nobody but the wife, and she'll say anything I tell her," the Greek told him. "And you can get out," he went on to her, "and I'll tell you what I want you to do afterward."

"All right, we'll go over the story," resumed the lawyer.

They rehearsed it together at some length, the lawyer referring to his notes frequently, while the Greek in his own words gave an account of the affair that tallied with the known facts of the case.

"Good!" said the former in conclusion. "I'll see old man Newsome right away, and you'll get the nine hundred tomorrow."

"Generous, ain't you?" the sick man interrupted. "I got to hand it to you for working out a stunt I never thought of myself, but Newsome's father is rich, and I know you're digging him for every dollar he'll stand for. You're welcome to every cent you can get out of him above what I want, but if I don't get five thousand you don't get a thing out of me."

The lawyer uttered a profane protest.

"Five thousand," returned the Greek. "Take it or I'll send somebody around to see the old man for myself."

The other started to continue the argument with him, but the sick man's temperature had risen alarmingly. He was deliciously set upon the amount named, and refused to listen to any attempt at a compromise. His caller was compelled to accede to his demands.

"Bring in the little bills," the sick man asked, "and you'd better come around early in the morning before this fever starts to coming up."

The lawyer returned to Mr. Newsome's residence and succeeded in getting the promise of an additional one thousand dollars from him.

The full amount was turned over to him early upon the following morning, and Mr. Newsome's representative and witnesses of the latter's selection were taken to the Greek's home.

They remained without for a few moments, while their escort spoke with the dying man, and then they departed.

The Greek made an effort to arise as he cursed the lawyer, failed at him for trying to torture a man who could not defend himself, threatened him and ordered him from the house.

ADVERTISEMENTS WRITING.

ADVERTISEMENTS, Booklets, Circulars, etc., as I prepare them, are the yeast that raises your sales. They are well worked together with selling phrases that "stick," seasoned with sugar-coated words of persuasion, and contain the salt that shortens time and emphasizes success. Don't get the idea that everything that talks about your store is advertising, and remember that advertising which brings results is not a gailop of imagination driven by an amateur writer or an intelligent clerk. Let me help you. George M. Zellmer, care of Kingston Freeman.

Berlin, Aug. 19.—(By wireless.)—A British cruiser and destroyer were torpedoed and sunk in an engagement on Tuesday with German torpedo boats, the admiralty announced today. The admiralty also announced that German naval ships had bombarded London Tuesday night.

Mohank Comes Back to Form.

Mohank Lake, Aug. 19.—Walden's crack "first team" came up Wednesday afternoon and looked dangerous for one inning. In that first inning, they hammered in two runs, which they carefully cherished without augmentation for the remainder of the game. Just to even the score, the first time up Owl knocked a homer to the centerfield woods, scoring Churchill, who had singled. The deadlock continued until the sixth inning, when Mohank fell upon Pulver for six lusty hits, each one of which proved good for a run, adding two more in the eighth, making the story 10 to 2. Owl fanned thirteen men and Pulver eight. Sheldon, Owl, Barney and Fernald did most of the hitting. The score:

MENKE'S DAILY SPORTING LETTER

(By Frank G. Menke.)

New York, Aug. 19.—From out of the heated confines of Tucson, Arizona, comes a story of a wonderful invention—the jumping Mexican golf ball.

The ball is so constructed that when it gets into the shade of long grass, or sinks into casual or other water, it immediately begins to jump, and it jumps so high that it clears the water or grass and is plainly visible to the searcher.

The Mexican jumping bean forms the core together with a little grub worm. Now these worms dislike shade and as soon as a ball goes into a shady place, such as high grass or water, the worm begins to flap its tail. In flapping it naturally will hit the jumping bean, which upon being flapped, immediately begins to jump.

This new invention is expected to prove a great boon to golfers who have a faculty of driving wild and sending their ball into dark, damp places.

What Kind of a Crowd, Fred?

"Ball players," asserts Frederick Clarke, boss of the Pirates, "play better, snappier baseball when a crowd is present." Crowd of girls, umpires, policemen, or what kind of a crowd?

Selling Spent Bullets.

A western gun club which has maintained the same shooting range for many years, recently delegated a squad of laborers to comb the ground for spent bullets. The men gathered more than 25 tons of shot, which were sold at the rate of $70 a ton. Other clubs are beginning to do likewise.

Child Jockey a Wonder.

Fred Judy, the 82 pound jockey, who is something of a sensation on the Saratoga, N. Y., track, is being touted as a coming wonder. He is 16 years old, handles a horse like a veteran and has outridden many of the best jockeys in the game. His home is in Kansas City, where his father keeps a law office.

Pipp a Pippin.

Walter Pipp, secured by the Yanks from the Tigers, is one of the 1915 sensations of the American League. Pipp, one of the timeliest hitters on the team and in addition to that he has hammered out more than three baggers and more home runs than Ty Cobb, and has made almost as many doubles as the "Georgia Peach."

Method in Hart's Retirement.

Maybe Bill Hart quit his umpiring job in the National League because he's a firm believer in the "safety" rule. In these days of Helme the Zim, Johnny the "Terrible Trojan," Johnny McGraw and a six club battle for the pennant there's no telling what might befall an umpire.

Doyle Bill Rogers.

Infielder Bill Rogers deserves some kind of a medal. He began playing major league ball in 1909. That's six years ago and Bill never has been chased from a ball game by an umpire.

Just now Bill is with the Reds. Until last season he was in the Pacific Coast League. The Naps grabbed him then, tried him out, and let him go.

Bill was manager and captain of his team on the Pacific coast. He was known as an aggressive, scrappy player, but he seems to possess the wonderful faculty of going just far enough—and no further—when he is "riding" an umpire.

Catch Big Sharks on Hooks.

Shark fishing is providing lots of sport for anglers off the New Jersey coast. Special lines are being used and some of the sharks of the blue-nosed variety that have been caught weigh over 140 pounds and measure over 6 feet in length.

During the early part of the fishing, before the anglers were "jerry" to the tricks of the sharks, many of the fish got away by biting the line in two. But the fishermen now use a wire loader about six feet in length that defies the shark's teeth.

Seven Year Old Tennis Star.

Brooklyn boasts of a tennis wizard in the person of Billy Ellwood, aged seven, who has taken the measure of many adults who have played against him. Billy is no taller than the net and he insists upon using a regulation racket. He began to play tennis three years ago, under his father's teaching, and now dear old dad, who is a star player, has to hum some to beat his diminutive offspring.

SCENE OF VIOLENT HURRICANE.

The Hotel Galvez, Galveston, Texas.

Galveston, Aug. 19.—It is considered remarkable that the loss of life in the great hurricane which swept this city on Monday night and Tuesday morning was not appalling. Reports from the outlying districts indicate that while the damage to crops has been severe, there has been little or no loss of life. The Hotel Galvez, which faces the sea wall received the brunt of the storm but escaped with slight damage.

AUSTRIAN SUPPLY RAILWAY.

AN AUSTRIAN LIGHT HORSE RAILWAY.

The impracticability of rebuilding all the railways destroyed by the Russians in their retreat from Galicia and through Poland, coupled with the increased demand for transportation facilities to get supplies to the front has forced the Austrians to build many miles of light railway tracks. This photo shows some of the narrow gauge trucks being drawn along one of these hastily constructed railways, loaded with material for extending the tracks as the army moves forward.

Note the short rails of which the track is built and the stacks of such rails on the rear car.
